

the long, stormy passage of two months. Emphasize the courage of these people in undertaking such a difficult journey to a new and unsettled country for the sake of freedom.

Do not dwell on the terrible privations of that first winter at Plymouth, simply say that they were cold and hungry and that many died.

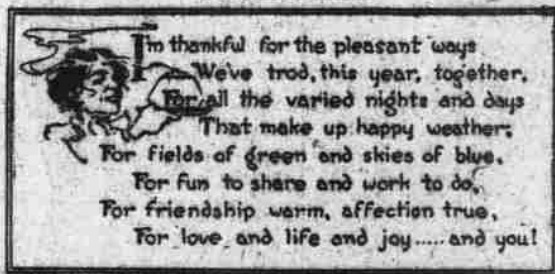

Tell how when spring came, some friendly Indians helped them plant corn, wheat and barley and that in the fall their harvest was so great they had enough food to last all winter.

So they said, "Let us have a day of Thanksgiving and thank God for his goodness. It was He who sent the rain and sun to make the grain grow."

Describe the Thanksgiving with the services in the little church and the three days of feasting and fun with the Indians, who had been invited for the holidays.

Make the children understand that this was three hundred years ago and that every November since then there has been a Thanksgiving holiday in this country.

Teacher: "When is the best time to gather fruit?"

Small Boy: "Please, sir, when the dog's chained up."

Soldier: "Yes, sir, I have stood unmoved while shells were bursting around me. Could you?"

Actor: "Well, that would depend largely upon the age of the eggs."

Chorus girls are thankful that there are bigger lobsters on Broadway than in Chesapeake bay.

Mr. Roosevelt isn't expecting it but if a presidential nomination should be dropped in his stocking it won't find any hole in the toe.
